“In Isolation’ speaks of the unique positions of individuals within their collective flowerbeds. Each one of us “pollinates” the world with our actions, views, thoughts, and ideas. As the world goes through a continuous cycle of life and death, we too, plant “seeds” with our conscious and subconscious thoughts. These thoughts grow and become new blooms that sprout with movement of life, across every facet of Earth. At times of sudden upheaval, challenges arise. Our emotions are “tested”. A silver lining however, exists even amongst the darkest of days.

When we embrace these unexpected changes, and assess our inner self and perspectives, it encourages us to be more aligned and present along our path in life. As flowers go through seasonal changes, we too experience seasons of emotions throughout life. Optimism plays an important role in encouraging and achieving a balanced direction when faced with challenges. It is when we accept the unfavourable, we allow the favourable to flow into our lives.

Just like a flower, it adapts itself accordingly. They withstand external conditions, and find the necessary nourishment in their surroundings in order to allow new growth to develop; to blossom.

We learn valuable lessons, especially during times of isolation. We have the ability to grow, learn and share from one another, when mastering through the eyes of one's self.
